Arnold's Treason.

We extract from the address of Professor Coppee, delivered to the graduating class of West Point, a graphic version of the treason of Benedict Arnold, which, as one of the most impressive lessons of the very short time alletted to me in elaborating one thought of common in-terest to cadets. I find the text in the words of our immortal Washington, and a few statistics of the Revolutionary history, doubtless well known to you punnishing history, doubtless well known to you all, must be given to chiefdate it. On the 22nd of September, 1789, General Arnold returned from his interview with Major Andre, at and near the house of Joshua Hett Smith, to Beverly, and then made all preliminary arrangesments for the surrender of this post, but without as for was known, taking any without, as far as is known, taking any one into his confidence. On the 24th. the British were to come up the river and take West Point. This was well ignorance of the analty treason, whose gage, to announce his purpose to Araold; but as he approached Arnold's house, he turned off toward the river fast, the countenance of the host, cold-timed, as Washington was not expected to return from Hartford until the 26th. Most unexpectedly, however, he changed his plans and recurred through Duch-ess county to Fishkill on the 2lth. He bargest assortment of stayed that night with the French amassador, who was there, and in happy final coil was being wound; he took saddle before dawn of the 25th, in order to reach Gen. Arnold's headquarters in time to breakfast with the General and Mrs. Arnold, and then to inspect the works at West Point. Some soldiers and gone before with Washington's bag-Lafayette, who was riding with him, exclaimed: "General, that is the wrong way; you know Mrs. Arnold is waiting for us." Washington replied, in a pleasant way, "All the young men are in love with Mrs. Arnold," and added, "Go and take your breakfast, and tell Mrs. Arnold not to wait for me; that I will be there by and by." So the staff went to Arnold's house and took breakblooded as was the man, being unable blooded as was the man, being unable to conceal his secret trouble and misgivings. The British had not come, and there was no tidings. Washington had arrived two days sooner than he was expected. While at breakfast, Lieutenant Allen, of Arnold's command, came in with a letter. It was from below. He tore it open, expecting to read news of the enemy's movement up the river. Horror and astonishment; the tidings were from Major Jameson, that Major Andre was in his bands, a prisoner and a spy. Leaping from his seat, he announced to his guests that an urgent message called for his presence at West Point; and he left that as a message, should General Washington arrive before his return; he would return, he said, as soon as possible. He then went to his wife's room, and sent for her. In a few words he announced the necessity of going at once to the British lines. Leaving her in a swoon on the floor, he rushed out, mounted one of the horses of Washington's cavaleade in waiting at the door, galloped down a steen pathway to Beverly dock, got into his sixoared barge, and ordered the oarsmen to pull with a will for Teller's Point, promising them an extra ration of rum and a reward in money, and telling them that he was hurrying that he might transact his business there and return without delay to meet General Washington. As they passed Teller's Point. ington. As they passed Teller's Point, and neared the Vulture man-of-war, he spread his white handkerchief as a flag of truce, and reached the British ship, a traitor, in safety—a villain under protection which could not fail. It was a race for life, and he won it. Just after Arnold's flight Washington arrived at Beverly. On being told that Arnold had gone to West Point, he took a hasty breakfast, and hurried over to meet him there. As the beat approached the landing, Washington was surprised to find that there was no salute, and no guard turned out to receive him. Indeed, the commanding officer, Colonel Lamb, of the artillery, was Icisurely promptly.

I shall receive from day to day new styles of Jowelry, Silver and Plated Ware, which I will sell at the lowest market rates.

Let Watch repairing and engraving done and all kinds of grain for feed. This Mill was built by Holmes & Higuchard, of Boston. Lamb, of the artillery, was leisurely strolling down the path as the barge landed. Confused when he saw the HAT AND CAP STORE, General-in-Chief, he stammered out: 'Had I any idea your Excellency was coming, I would have given you a proper reception." "Sir," exclaimed Washington, "Is not General Arnold here?" No, sir. He has not been here these two days, and I have not heard from him in that time." Astonished, and re-curring to his old suspicious, Washington inspected the works, and returned about noon to Arnold's house. There Hamilton met him with the proofs of
